The month of October started with China celebrating the Golden Week; the PBoC cut down payment requirement for 1st home buyers in cities without home-purchase restrictions from 30% to 25% and said it is planning for measures to support Macau. In the auto space, the government announced a 5% tax cut on cars with engines less than 1.6L and measures to promote new energy vehicles, sending the sector higher across the region. China's official manufacturing saw some modest improvement from August while services PMI remained robust. Foreign exchange reserve data also saw a stabilization of capital outflows. Even the Q3 2015 GDP came in slightly better than market expectation. The PBoC announced cuts in the benchmark 1-year lending and deposit rates of 25 basis points (bps) and RRR by 50 bps. The month ended with China concluding the 5th Party Plenum and abolished the single-child policy which has been in place for 35 years. Under this backdrop, the Hang Seng index led the regional market rebound with 8.6% performance. In ASEAN, the World Bank downgraded its 2015, 2016 and 2017 growth projections. However, the improved sentiment in China economic outlook also triggered a strong rebound in FSSTI (+7.43%), JCI (+5.48%) and PCOMP (+3.49%). During the month, Asian currencies generally strengthened against USD.

Cement sales grew +3% YoY in 3Q15 and retailers showed some sales growth where Ace Hardware, Ramayana, and Alfamart showed positive sales growth of +1.6%, +7.6%, and +12% YoY respectively.
